walls and fun accessories are dotted around, although the furniture and sanitaryware are much more grown-up in style.

“The bathroom belonging to the teenage son was the biggest challenge,” says Simon, “since being a listed building we were restricted on erecting new walls, and being at the top of the house, the room had a bulkhead from the staircase and exposed timber beams. We built a glass screen below an existing exposed beam then made one of the panels into a secret door to access the ensuite. And although contemporary in style, the wall-hung handle-less furniture, framed heated mirror and open shelving built into the recess are all finished in a richly toned American black walnut that complements the period features well. Like the kitchen, the bathrooms feel inviting and homely and are very much in keeping with the house’s character.” ●
