The Young Designer's Award is usually given for one outstanding piece of work. This year, however, a complete collection by 26-year-old Benjamin Hubert was presented to the judges. He calls it A Year in the Making, and it includes eight ranges of furniture and lighting for seven British and continental manufacturers, all in production. The judges found this collection innovative, aesthetically pleasing, functional and well-presented: "An achievement for any designer, let alone one so early in his career."

When this diligent young designer asked if he had worked on it for the whole year, he replied, "Pretty much. But I think in life you either do it or you don't."

INNOVATION AWARD

WINNER DYSON AIR MULTIPLIER™ FAN

Designed by Sir James Dyson. Price £199.99.
Contact 0800 298 0298, dyson.co.uk.

Sir James Dyson does it again. He has taken a product in common use, identified its shortcomings and set out to solve them. In this case it is the fan. As Sir James says: "I've always been disappointed by fans. Their spinning blades chop up the airflow, causing annoying buffeting. They're also hard to clean and children always want to poke their fingers through the grille."

In response, James developed a fan without blades. It is an engineering feat of aesthetic simplicity. To the eye, it is a simple loop the size of a dinner plate sitting on a sturdy cylinder, but it emits a powerful stream of cooling air, which can be precisely adjusted. The fan can also be oscillated at the touch of a button. It exemplifies the dictum that in good design form follows function.
